Well Sophie's talking a lot about going to school, given it's only a couple of months away. And she's been looking forward to that for the last few months. Particularly with the ... going to orientation and getting her school uniform etc.

She's very excited about meeting new friends and learning to do lots of new things. I think particularly reading. She's very good at her letters and now, with a new baby brother, she can't wait to start reading to him instead of mum and dad doing it all the time.

Sophie doesn't have many concerns about starting school. However, one of the things I think she might find difficult is the fact that a lot of the friends that she's made at kindy won't be with her at school.

But she has learnt a lot about how to make friends and being resilient etc. So I think that she'll find in time she loves the new friends that she makes at school.
